It appeared that he had taken the proceeds of the sales at the store amounting in all to $48.50, and he was committed in default of $1,000 bail.

ALLEGED FORGERY. On Saturday last, W. J. McCullough, of the firm of Scott & Co., oil dealers at Oil City, was arrested at that place by the Sheriff of Forrest county on complaint of A. H. Stanle, cashire of the Tionesta Bank, charging him with having issued a forged draft for $1,000 On Monday he was taken to Tionesta and brought fore Justice Hunter, who committed him in default of ball. The draft alleged to be forged was, it is said, drawn on the Tionesta Bank by James Hunter in favor of John Miller. It was signed across the face—"Good. A. H. Steele," and endorsed by John Miller. It appears that Mc-Cullough presented the draft to two of the banks at Oll City,some time last week, and saked to put it up as security for a small amount of money which he desired to horrow. The banks offered to cash it, but would not take it as security. He then presented it to a private party, who took it and lent him $175. A day or two afterward Mc Cuttourh paid the party from whom he had ber rowed the money $120, and said that he would pay the remaining $55 to a few days. In the ed Oil City and there learned that the draft had ented at the banks and afterward found been presented at the banks, and afterward found the individual who held it as security for the money which he had lent. We then stopped two of the machines, working twenty seven minutes. Throwing off two more machines we worked them idnered minutes, when the origine stopped, with the steam pressure in the boiler twenty theory and, water the between the second and lover gauge. This gives us a boiler twenty there i units; water the between the second and one range [Fins given as power of one hundred and fifty horses for forty-tim, minutes, and fore horses power for minutes, and fifty horses power for minutes.

"Incrustation is the worst enemy of the steam boiler; for, in all case, it is a poor conductor of heat, and, by preventing the contact of the witer with the boiler plates, the latter breone averlanted and consequently rapidly destroy it; particularly as the concave form of our boiler scatters the collection of sediment in the lowest point, and as this is the portion of the boiler that, it directly over the fire, the iron is soon destroyed, entire plates become overheated, the expansion contact with the highly heated, burned and we are comes in contact with the highly heated, burned and we are end metal, sudden formation of steam is curst, sudden increase of pressure follows, cursing tup ture, and, with it, all the disastrous consequences of explosion.

"Having thus pointed out the true cause of solier explosions, the next step is to point out the remedy. To do this, let us return to the water in the boiler.

"Circulation of water depends upon the differ—"Circulation of water depends upon the differ-ter in the boiler. "Creathing against the difference is weight of two columns, the lighter belog displaced by the heavier, so that to produce the same we must have one column exposed to heat to make it lights; whereas the other column must be separated or protected from best, so that in no case will its descent be prevented. A giance at the drawing shows that in the Perkins boiler no such effect could be produced. First being exposed to must introduced. uced. First, being exposed to the most intensi-tent of the fire, we also recognize the fact tha the annular space examit permit the free desects of the water, as that also is exposed to heat, and in both the lateral and annular spaces steam is constantly formed, and the introduction of the diaphragm retards rather than accelerates the production of steam. Professor Bache says that the introduction of the cylender or displacements of the cylender or displacements of steams.

production of steam. Professor Bache says that the introduction of the cylender or displaying acased violent founding, so much so that he was obliged to still a tunucl-simped cylender to the top of the vessel to prevent the water from being forced over its sides.'

"Now, this violent foaming is the direct result of the division of the water by which steam formed at the bottom, rising capidly and expanding, carries solid water with it. That, under such circumstances, a certain quantity of fact cannot evaporate as much water is endeat, from the fact that heat being power, all power lost in forcing the steam through the water is on much leat wasted.

"This other holler in which the desired conditions are proved, show plainly where the Perkins bother ladd, and how a perfect circulation of the water may be obtained, causing a rapid upward, and a slow downward current, and provision is also made for the collection of impurities below the line of fire.

"That the two systems differ, in the most essential points, is apparent, as well as that one they accomplishes what the other merely attempted.

"In conclusion, I would by down a positive law for the construction of atesms bolders, which, under all circumstances, must be absolutely free from disastrious explosions.

quite satisfied from the attention he had given o this subject, that the chief cause of steam boil er explosions was the lack of a sufficient reliable water supply. The hollers are always burst by the explinent power of atom, and this arises in consequence of too little water. He could not seent to all of Mr. Miller's propositions. The gentleman had talked about a boiler free from danger, and fit to be placed in the har de of ignorent men. He would ask if a keg of gunpowde could be free from danger if piaced in the hands of an ignorant man. He knew very little differ ence, comparatively, between a tkeg of gunpow would be easy to show that water had an amoun of explosive force, when sufficient heat is applied to it, to make it comparable with gunpowder. He believed that it could be demonstrated that a greatest amount of heat, half as much, or hearly that amount, of the explosive force, as an equal weight of gunpowder. He thought one of the in the hands of incompetent men, or men wh for want of knowledge of their own danger be came careless of their duty in respect to the boil er. ANOTHER STRIKE.—A. H. Bronson, a veteral oll operator, has just put down a well on what used to be known as the Bates Petroleum Company Farm, near the Pitcher Well. He comthat he drilled the last few hundred feet through 51/4 inch casing, well seed-bagged, had no water to exheust, the oil came at once, and last night the yield was fully 75 barrels per day. It is a good well, and we hope it will improve. Mr. Bronson deserves success.

The supply is steadily declinian in the mountain streams, and but few sportsmen think now of entering the Alleghenies for troop, but go rather to the northern part of the State of New York, where the nimble catchers of the figure said to be shundard. The real cause and nature of the disease are in olved in much doubt. People in Illinois believe that it is brought into their herds by cattle from Texas; but others ever that the Texas cattle are calthy and not subject to the epidemic. In reply to this it is said that the elements of the dis see are brought by these cattle and distributed upon the prairies in their excrement, which le supposed to contain poisonous qualities derived herbage innocuous to them, but deadly in its effects upon Northern herds. The questlos is still an open one, and one that excites the peo ple of the West very naturally, as it is a vita one to them. Prof. Gangee, an eminent writes that the disease is not communicable to persons who drink the milk and eat the flesh of animals affected by it. It operates in the blood and not upon the tleaues or milk secretions. He gave that he would not accupie to eat the ficely because the posson is not a specific virus calcu lated to do injury to man or animals; and as to the harmlessness of the milk he adduces the inc that sucking calves continue to suckie their sick mothers without concentrating the disease.
